The Selfish Crocodile

Deep in the forest, in the river, lived a large crocodile.

He was a very selfish crocodile. He didn't want any other animals and fish to drink or bathe in the river. He thought it was HIS river.

Every day, he shouted to the animals of the forest, "Stay away from my river! It's MY river! If you come in my river, I'll eat you all!"

So there were no fish, no tadpoles, no frogs, no crabs, no crayfish in the river. All were afraid of the selfish crocodile.

The forest animals kept away from the river as well. Whenever they were thirsty, they went for miles to drink in other rivers and streams.

Every day the crocodile lay on his great big back in the sun, picking his big, sharp teeth with a stick.

But early one morning, the forest was awakened by a loud groaning sound. Something was in terrible pain.

Everyone thought that it was an animal caught by the crocodile.

But as the sun came out brightly, they saw that it was the crocodile who was in pain. He was lying on his big back, holding his swollen jaw, and he was crying real tears.

The animals drew closer – but not too close.
Some of the animals felt sorry for the crocodile.

Suddenly a little mouse appeared, sniffing the air.
He ran along the crocodile's tail, then on to his tummy.

The other animals stared.

"Look at that mouse!" chattered a monkey.

"He's either very brave or mad!"

"He's going to be eaten for sure!" said an iguana.

The mouse crept along the crocodile's big neck,
and into his open mouth.

There was a hush in the forest.
